There are a good many Omahas in the United States even though their names may be something different.

The speed with which United States troops were moved into Omaha was commendable. There was little red tape apparently.

There is some reason to believe that the whole truth regarding the Flume matter has not come to light as yet. There may be some interesting chapters to be supplied in Rome.

Now that Alexander Dunnett of St. Johnsbury has positively declined to run for either governor or congressman, there will be a renewed desire on the part of the people that he should run for one office or the other. It takes a positive declaration like that to stir the people to the belief that they are missing something.

Someone has done a good job in removing the underbrush and limbs of trees that obstructed the vision on the dangerous curve and bridge near the Smith "dugout mansion" on the Barre-East Barre road, thereby reducing almost all the possibility of a repetition of a collision like that of last summer. Under the new conditions it is possible to see the highway from either approach.

Major General Leonard Wood was not permitted to go to Europe in command of a division of the United States army in the great war but he gets a small chance to show what he can do by being placed in command of the United States forces in Omaha following the race riot and the attempted lynching of Mayor Smith of that city. It is a comparatively small job which General Wood has to do but it will require considerable tact in the doing.

Announcement that Chief Forester Hastings has discharged the fire wardens for the season calls to attention that Vermont was very fortunate during the past season in regard to forest fires, or rather Vermont has had few forest fires because of the faithfulness of the state forestry department in looking after the forests. Although the early part of the summer season was very dry, there were comparatively few forest fires and the total loss of the season has not amounted to much. No doubt the system of forest wardens can do much to reduce the loss, aided by a more intelligent view of the need for caution on the part of the public.

As an argument for good roads we commend the experience of a road worker in Coventry who had two ribs and a collarbone broken, one elbow put out of joint and head and hips badly bruised while he was attempting to steer his automobile out of a rut in the road while driving to his work. In his exertions he tipped his automobile over and practically ruined the vehicle. The news item relating the experience does not state how rapidly the car was being driven or how deep the rut was, but the suspicion naturally arises that the car must have been traveling at a fairly smart clip in order to cause so many injuries and so much damage, and that, too, regardless of the depth of the rut. However, if the rut hadn't been there the accident probably would not have happened; which is an argument in favor of the removal of that rut and all other ruts in the highways of Vermont. Safety of traffic demands that the roads be made smooth.

VERMONT'S PROBABLE SHOWING IN THE CENSUS.

Announcement from Washington of the division of Vermont into two supervision districts for the 18th census in 1920, as usual, calls to attention how closely the east and west sides of the state sized up in population in the 1910 census. In a total population of 355,956 for that year there was a difference of only 416 in the two districts, the first leading the second, or the east side, by that margin. What relationship of figures the 1920 census will show is a matter for interesting speculation, as is also the contemplation of the probable figures for the state as a whole. Has Vermont gone back in population during the 10-year period from 1910 to 1920? Has it just about maintained its own? Or has it made a slight increase in total count? The supposition of a material gain is, of course, out of the question.

In the two previous censuses Vermont has depended upon Barre and a few other towns to make good the losses sustained in the rural sections of the state. For example, from 1890 to 1900 Vermont made a total gain of 11,210 in population, and of that total gain Barre contributed 4,302, having made the remarkable gain of 103.8 per cent in the 10-year period. That period was the time of the great expansion in the granite industry, although the period from 1880 to 1890 had been one of marked increase. Again, during the period from 1900 to 1910 Vermont added 12,315 to its population—a very modest figure, indeed, but far better than the average for the last half century. Of that gain Barre contributed more than one-sixth, or 2,280, to be exact; whereas Burlington gained but 1,828, Montpelier 1,500, Rutland 2,047. Eight counties of the 14 showed an increase, ranging from 1 per cent in Windham to 13.9 per cent in Washington county, while six counties showed a decrease, ranging from 1.1 per cent in Franklin county to 13.7 per cent in Grand Isle. From the above figures it will be seen that Barre was in large measure responsible for the increase in population in the two decades.

But Barre cannot be depended upon in the forthcoming census to make up so large a percentage of loss in the rural sections of the state. Not that Barre is at a standstill by any means. But the progress made by Barre in population in the decade from 1910 to 1920 will not be so marked, it is safe to say, as it was in either of the two previous censuses. This is in part due to the fact that while the volume of business done in the granite industry is much larger than it was at the time of the two previous censuses there has been a curtailment in labor due to the introduction of improved machinery and it is in part due to the fact that the defections incident to the war and to war business have made a handicap which may not be overcome by the time the census is taken next year. Therefore, it cannot be expected that Barre will show a large per cent of increase from 1910 to 1920.

Hence if the state is to show an appreciable increase in the forthcoming census it will have to look to certain other sections, whose industrial development has been somewhat comparable to Barre's development in the granite industry years back. This relates chiefly to those towns which have sprung up in machine shop development, as well as some that have gained mills in the 10-year period. We shall expect to note that Windsor and Springfield on the east side of the state and Bennington and Rutland on the west side will show material advance in population, while Burlington ought to make as good a showing as it did in the previous census. There will be some other towns to help in swinging the population ahead as a counteracting agency to the losses sustained in the rural communities.

This loss in the rural sections will be seriously felt in the compilation of Vermont's population statistics for 1920, but it will be more than made up by the advance made in the cities and towns which can point to awakened industrial life. Vermont's population, therefore, will probably show a gain although considerably less than in the last two previous censuses.

Honor God in Middlesex.

We are recognized, the world over as a Christian nation. Our Congress, our state legislature, some of our courts and hospitals and schools begin their day's work with some form of divine worship. We believe that God gave us the power to win the recent terrible war. And now as a people we seem to be sadly lacking in respect and reverence for the God we are supposed to worship with our whole hearts.

There are many ways in which God's holy day is being desecrated. One of these is public baseball playing on Sunday. After due consideration, we, the members of the Middlesex M. E. church, have voted to make a public appeal to the baseball players themselves and to every individual citizen, both Protestant and Catholic.

We would ask them to soberly consider the matter in the light of God's word, to reflect upon the influence it has upon our children in their character-forming years. God's word stands as the Rock of Ages and however lax may have become our habits and our consciences, it is still our duty to obey the great command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

If we will thus consider the matter, together with other ways of Sabbath desecration, we will need no application of the law to regulate our habits.

Sept. 28. Middlesex M. E. Church.

EXPECT TO CATCH NEGRO.

Who Is Alleged to Have Assaulted White Woman at Merchantville, N. J.

Merchantville, N. J., Sept. 30.—Capture of a negro, who is alleged to have assaulted Mrs. Mary Notsey and for whom a posse of more than 100 armed men searched throughout the night, was expected to-day. Headed by Sheriff Lippincott of Burlington county, the posse last night surrounded a swamp where the negro was believed to have fled.

Threats of violence were made, but the authorities declared no cruelty would be tolerated.

If you feel that you cannot afford to build a home, owing to the high cost of all materials entering into the construction, we ask you to consider seriously the proposition of buying one that is already built, as there are properties for sale which would be bought for much less than you can build. We would be very glad to assist in the purchase of properties and pleased to have you call and talk with us regarding definite plans for payment, etc.
